User stories Progress

Lind Beaver requested to have a browser which is user friendly and easy to navigate through.

Lind appreciate minimalist design patterns with little to no words, due to her disability.

Another reason that Lind enjoys simplicities of the website is so she can work her way around through her daily tasks such as generate reports effectively.

Lind also wished to filter the city names one by one to make it easier to go through a lot quicker. Rather than having a large cluster.

Keeping Lind Beaver's wishes in consideration as developers we have create a website that would benefit Lind with her day-to-day struggles.

As one of the requests we were asked to make the website easy to use, which is why we have kept the design minimalists but eye catching. Allowing the user to get captured straight away. To Furthermore discipline our website, we have displayed easy to find buttons and popups which again has allowed users like Lind to freely navigate through the website, taking them from point A to point B to point C in the least frustrating way. Lastly, we have added this feature where the user is able to filter through the city one by one.

Here are some of the screens shot of our website that were taken to show its features.
